President Completes National Goals Setup

By the Associated Press

President Eisenhower yesterday completed setting up a long-term study commission on national goals which he first proposed more than a year ago.

The President named nine members to serve with Chairman Henry Wriston, former president of Brown University, and Vice Chairman Frank Pace, former Secretary of the Army in the Truman administration and now board chairman of General Dynamics Co. These two were designated last Wednesday.

In a letter to Mr. Wriston made public yesterday, Mr. Eisenhower said he hoped the commission will "develop a broad outline of co-ordinated national policies and programs for the next decade and longer."

Private Financing

The commission's work will be financed entirely with private funds, and Mr. Eisenhower has said that difficulty in arranging the financing was what delayed the panel's formation. Exactly where the money will come from has not been announced.

The President first mentioned plans for the commission in his January, 1959, state-of-the-Union message when he said:

"If progress is to be steady

we must have long-term guides extending far ahead, certainly five, possibly even 10 years."

In his letter to Mr. Wriston, Mr. Eisenhower emphasized his desire that the inquiry be conducted free of any direct connection with the President or other parts of the Federal Government. He said, however, that all Federal agencies including the President's staff will cooperate.

The members announced yesterday are:

James R. Killian, Jr., president of the Corporation of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology; Gen. Alfred M. Gruenther, president of the American Red Cross; Clark Kerr, president of the University of California; Learned Hand, retired New York Federal circuit judge; Erwin Canham, editor-in-chief of the Christian Science Monitor and president of the United States Chamber of Commerce; Colgate Darden, former president of the University of Virginia and one time Virginia Governor; James B. Conant, former president of Harvard University and former Ambassador to West Germany; George Meany, president of the AFL-CIO, and Crawford Greenewalt, president of E. I. duPont de Nemours and Co.

Director Choice

The commission will name its own executive director. The name of William P. Bundy, son-in-law of former Secretary of State Dean G. Acheson, has been mentioned for this post.

In a memorandum to the commission, Mr. Eisenhower said:

"We are now the strongest Nation on the earth. This fact brings with it the realization that with power comes responsibility. We have found ourselves in a position in which the entire free world looks to us for leadership and help, in the first instance against an aggressive Communist conspiracy, supported by rapidly growing economic and military strength, but more broadly in the world-wide struggle for realization of decent conditions of life.

ward toward these goals, in an era of vast technological change and development, we shall not be able to fulfill our world role or, most basically of all, be true to ourselves and to the ideals on which this Nation is based."

But behind these problems of our external relationships, lie the more basic issues of realizing our own ideals for the development of American society. Unless we can press for-
